

Adults with functional disabilities who live in their own home can self-direct their health related tasks.

What is Self-Directed Care?

We perform many health-care tasks for ourselves. We open a bottle of prescription medication and take it as ordered. Perhaps we have a long-standing health problem, such as diabetes, and we monitor our blood sugar level. Other health care tasks could include special bowel programs, bladder catheterization, or wound care.

However, what if a functional disability prevents an adult from physically performing a health-care function that he or she would normally do? An adult with a disability can now choose to direct and supervise a paid personal aide or Individual Provider (IP) to perform such tasks. (An aide paid by home care agency cannot perform such tasks.) In 1999 a law was passed which established this right of self-directed care.

If you have a disability, live at home, are age 18 or older, and want to self-direct your own health care, you are responsible for the following:

- ▶ You must tell the health care professional who has ordered the treatment that you want to direct a personal aide or IP to perform the task.
- ▶ You must have the necessary knowledge and ability to train someone to perform the tasks.
- ▶ You must train the personal aide or IP to perform the tasks.
- ▶ You must supervise the performance of the personal aide or IP.

IF YOU RECEIVE STATE FUNDING,

- ▶ Be sure the IP receives a copy of your service plan.
- ▶ Give the name of the IP or personal aide to your case manager or social worker. The case manager or social worker will register your provider. DSHS will do a criminal history background check on personal aides, and will maintain a registry of personal aides who have been found to abuse, neglect or exploit people. DSHS will not pay providers who have a criminal history.
