Person-Centered Planning

Impact of Person Centered Planning

• States will comply with CMS guidelines across all programs

• CMS guidelines are being evaluated

• New CMS guidelines mirror CFCO guidelines

• Washington is engaging in a stakeholder process to develop a transition plan to comply with all HCBS final rules.

See Handout 1 - § 441.540 Person-centered service plan

CFCO Design Possibilities

Low Choice and Flexibility

Choice:
- Benefit package contains only the 4 required services

Flexibility:
- Participants receive only the amount of each included service allowed in the plan

High Choice and Flexibility

Choice:
- Benefit package contains the 4 required services and may also contain some optional services

Flexibility:
- Participants may allocate their dollar amount between services, trading more of one service for less of another.
CFCO Design Possibilities

Low Administrative Complexity
- Services are authorized for the duration of the plan and reauthorized only when a change is requested.
- Reduced need to evaluate how much of a service to authorize and the progress toward goals.
- Client or representative makes the choices that will stay within the 103% per cap by trading off between available services to meet self identified priorities.

High Administrative Complexity
- The service amount is limited and must be reauthorized periodically.
- A determination of necessity must be made at each authorization.
- Increased need to evaluate how much of a service to authorize and the progress toward goals.
- Potentially new provider types to contract and manage.
- Case manager has the responsibility to manage utilization to stay within the 103% aggregate.
CMS requirements in all service models include:

- Annual assessments
- Significant change assessments
- Clients can make changes as their needs change
- Service options are discussed at each assessment
- Service delivery is monitored by the case manager
Flexibility

How flexible can flexible be?

CFCO can support clients and families to choose any combination of personal care, skills acquisition, back up systems, and relief care.
Flexibility

How can WA be that flexible?

- Complexity varies by client, our experience is that the majority of clients will use a majority of their benefit for personal care services.

- Administrative complexity in CFCO will be offset by no longer transferring clients between MPC and COPES when needs cannot be met by MPC.

- Health and safety assurances can be addressed by policy and practice.
How can WA be that flexible? Cont.

- Write skills acquisition definition broadly enough to allow clients to work on ADLs and IADLs within the number of training hours available.
  - Skills trainer responsible for documentation
  - Reviewed with client during routine monitoring contacts and at each assessment
  - Provide clear information to clients through materials such as the rights and responsibilities form and other documents
Flexibility

How can WA be that flexible? Cont.

- Establish rules limiting changes to service plan to no more than once per month effective the first of the following month

- Consider building additional time/$$ for case management to discuss service options if necessary
  - 30 minutes of case management time costs approximately $250,000 - $500,000

Notes on Considered Service Options

Home Modifications, Behavior Supports, Specialized Medical Equipment, and Assistive Technology:

- May be too costly to include in CFCO
- May be too administratively complex to include in CFCO at this time
- Continue to access through waivers for now
- Consider adding to CFCO in the future
Possible CFCO Service Package
