3rd Annual Reaching American Indian Nations (RAIN) – 2/6/15 – 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. – University of Washington/Bothell

This event is dedicated to preparing American Indian, Alaska Native and First Nations students in grades 9-12 with the tools needed to access higher education. Students will interact with UW Bothell and Cascadia Community College students, alumni, staff, and faculty; engage with speakers; and participate in cultural and educational workshops. Breakout workshop opportunities will also be offered for chaperones. Food provided. Contact Rachel Meares, 425/352-3852, rmeares@uwb.edu, at UW/Bothell for more information.

Washington State Council for the Social Studies’ Chelan Conference/Spring Retreat – 3/6-8/15 – Campbells Resort, Chelan

This year the WSCSS Chelan Conference is co-sponsored by the University of Washington Jackson School of International Studies and will highlight “The Power of Stories: From Native Washington to Global Movement.” This is an exciting opportunity to network with other Washington Social Studies teachers and hear from Tribal leaders in education, civil rights, and culture from across the Pacific Northwest. In addition, workshops will be led by the Burke Museum, Facing the Future, The Jackson School, The Museum of History and Industry, The World Affairs Council, the OSPI Office of Native Education, and many others. The conference will convene from 1:00 p.m. on Friday, 3/6 to late morning on Sunday, 3/8. The WSCSS website has an expanded list of speakers, etc.: www.wscss.org/chelan-conference-and-retreat/.

Future Native Teacher Initiative Symposium – The Evergreen State College Longhouse – 3/19-20/15

The Washington Education Association (WEA) has partnered with regional tribes, Native education leaders within schools, colleges, and OSPI to create the Future Native Teacher Initiative with the goal of encouraging Native students to consider education as a career. The first FNTI symposium was conducted in May, 2014, and a second is planned for 3/19-20/15 at The Evergreen State College in Olympia. This is a two-day, hands-on teacher camp led by teachers and leaders from the Native American/Alaska Native community. Teams of Native American/Alaska Native college students and high school students (chaperones required for high school students) in grades 9-11 should plan to attend. For more information, contact either Janna Connor (jconnor@washingtonea.org) or Ben Ibale (bibale@washingtonea.org) at WEA.

Opportunities for Native Americans at the Tacoma Art Museum (TAM)

In their efforts to promote diversity, the Tacoma Art Museum is seeking Native American participation in our docent, volunteer, and school tour programs. They have a growing collection of contemporary Native American art and are working hard to make sure their education curriculum is culturally informed. Students and individuals of all ages and backgrounds are welcome at TAM, and they look forward to benefiting from their insight.

TAM offers a range of school tours and visitors can request a Native American art focus. Funding to help cover transportation and admission costs is available on a limited basis. Each tour includes a gallery visit and an optional hands-on art activity.

<http://www.tacomaartmuseum.org/education/school-tours/>

<http://www.tacomaartmuseum.org/education/school-tours/guided-school-tours/>

They would also like to recruit Native docents and volunteers. These programs are a great way to develop professional skills and to learn more about art, teaching, museums, and public speaking.

Seattle Teacher Residency

The Seattle Teacher Residency (STR) prepares residents to become teachers in the context of, and for classrooms in, Seattle Public Schools. This UW Master in Teaching program blends classroom apprenticeship with aligned, graduate-level course work and an intensive resident/mentor partnership. The application deadline for next year's cohort is February 6 and they welcome the opportunity to present this information to groups and/or meet with potential students that might be interested in the program. A flier with more information is attached, and contact Christy Giles, Recruiter and Admissions Coordinator, STR, christy@alliance4ed.org with any inquiries.
