Housing and Essential Needs (HEN) Referral Incapacity Review

The Housing and Essential Needs (HEN) Referral Incapacity Review is a process used to determine if an applicant or recipient is incapacitated and unable to meet their housing and essential needs. This review is conducted by the Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS) in accordance with Washington Administrative Code (WAC) 388-447-0110.

The review process includes evaluating the applicant's or recipient's ability to meet their housing and essential needs. This is done by assessing their physical, mental, and functional capabilities.

The purpose of the review is to determine if the applicant or recipient is eligible for housing and essential needs assistance.

If the applicant or recipient is determined to be incapacitated, they may be eligible for assistance under the Housing and Essential Needs (HEN) program.

Please consult the DSHS website for more information on the review process and eligibility requirements.
