Roads to Community Living

What is Roads to Community Living?

Roads to Community Living is part of a national program called Money Follows the Person.

Through this program, Washington State is exploring what services and support help people with complex, long-term care needs successfully move from institutions such as nursing homes back into the community.

If you are eligible and want to participate in the program, you may:

- Receive intensive one-on-one help to develop a transition plan with the services and support you need to move back into the community.
- Have access to additional services and support not currently available through existing programs.

These may be one-time-only expenditures or services needed during your move and transition back into the community.

"It took six months and a lot of hard work. With the support from the Roads to Community Living team, I'm back home!"

Who Can Participate in the Program?

Roads to Community Living is for anyone:

- Living in a nursing facility for three months or longer.
- Receiving Medicaid to pay for care.

What Kinds of Services and Support May Be Available?

- Help finding and setting up appropriate affordable housing.
- Life skills training or consulting services to help prepare you to live in the community again.
- Problem solving and behavior management skills training if challenging behaviors may jeopardize moving or remaining in the community.
- Assistive technology and durable medical equipment.
- A service animal.
- Training, education, or support for family and other caregivers.
- Mental health or substance abuse consultation or services.
